TWO OFFENDERS ARE CHARGED WITH GRAND LARCENY

In Judge N. J. Harris' division of the district court today, the trial of the case of the State of Utah against Adolph Schwartz and James Rose, charged with grand larceny was taken up and William A. Montgomery, Lars Peter Nielson, Henry Neuteboom, T. R. Bates, Charles W. Iverson, Earl R. Geiger, David W. Jones and John Martin, Jr., selected as jurors.

The information charges that the defendants, on about August 3, 1915, stole a revolver and certain clothing from Nelson Cook. There were three others charged with the offense, but they were minors and were turned over to the juvenile court, and later released by the juvenile judge.

Nelson Cook was placed on the witness stand and he testified that he met five men, among them being the defendants, near Riverdale, on the night of August 3, and that they attacked him and stole his clothes and revolver. He also stated that the men beat him over the head with an iron bar and placed him in a car of a train going east, the defendants and their companions taking possession of another car in the train. The witness said that he succeeded in calling the attention of a conductor to the holdup and that the trainman locked the men in the car and sent him back to Ogden to notify the officers. However, the young man was not positive as to the identity of the defendants, except that one of them was wearing his shoes when he was brought back to Ogden. Other members of the party, Mr. Cook said, were wearing some of his apparel on their return to Ogden.

Cook is a young man, and at the time of the alleged holdup he was employed as a second cook at the grading camps in Weber canyon. Since that time he found his way to Provo, where he was arrested and charged with burglarizing the residence of Joseph Yates. He was taken before the juvenile court there and committed to the state industrial school. He appeared on the witness stand in the school uniform.
